

The Expert Plasterer

This is a story about an expert plasterer who worked on the construction of Taj Mahal.

Once, the chief of construction was inspecting the site progress. For three days in a row, he noticed a particular plasterer sitting at the same spot and mixing and testing the plaster.

On the third day the inspector became angry and said...

Why are you simply sitting in the same spot for three days without making any progress? You are so lazy!

The other workers are finishing the work so fast. You are making no progress at all. You have not yet even finalised the plaster mix.

Hearing such harsh words, the man who was mixing the plaster became very furious...

...And he threw a handful of his plaster at the inspector.

However, the plaster missed the inspector and landed on a wall. It was so well mixed, so solid and hard that no one could get it off the wall. Till today, the plaster remains on the wall.

MORAL:

Whatever we do we must do it with perfection.
