

The Hunter and the Fox

Once a hunter was chasing a fox in the forest.

After some time he caught the fox and he was about to kill it.

As soon as he saw the king coming in his direction, he got scared as fox hunting was illegal. So, he hid the fox under the coat on his back.

The King greeted him and began to talk.

How are you today?

Oh, I am very good, your majesty.

The King had long conversation with the hunter on various subjects from weather to defense.

While the hunter was talking to the king, the half-dead fox was slowly biting the hunter in the back.

However, the hunter kept on tolerating the pain and had to force himself to completely remain cool during the discussions with the king.

And then the king left.

Due to fox's biting, the hunter collapsed and died as soon as the king left.

MORAL :

We should share our thoughts with other devotees so they can show the right direction. Masking our state of mind or keeping things in our hearts can be fatal. Therefore, to progress in Krishna Consciousness, we should open up in the right association.
