

The thief and the dacoits

One night a thief enters into Gopal's house.

Give me all
your ornaments,
and do it quickly.

Just then a big sound comes from outside...

What is that sound?

Oh! I think some other thieves are trying to enter my house. But why are you so worried?

Because they are a group of dacoits. They will murder me. Please save my life.

Alright don't panic, we'll hide you till they have gone.

Oh, thank you.
Sir, thank you...

Listen carefully,
and do exactly as I tell
you. Don't be afraid.

Gopal left the house by the front door.

Please come back soon.

I will, don't forget to do exactly as I've told you.

Just as Gopal's wife closed the front door, the dacoits broke in through the back door.

Give me all
your ornaments!

Give me your gold, if you want to save your life.

All the gold is locked in the locker and the key is with the master.

Where is the master?

He is there.

Out with the keys, you coward.

Please don't hurt me. I have no keys...

You liar, you are the master of the house and you say you do not have the keys?

The dacoits did not believe his words and started beating him.

Just then Gopal reached there with the soldiers and grabed the dacoits.

They are the dacoits, now where is the thief.

He has been punished enough for his crime, let's leave him alone.

No, thank you to help us to catch the dacoits.

Thank you for saving us.

MORAL:

In difficult times, one must be brave and find a clever way out of the problem. As in this case, Gopal cleverly handled the situation. Neither did he get scared of the dacoits, nor did he fight them.