Mother Yashoda sings Krishna's glories and wakes him up.

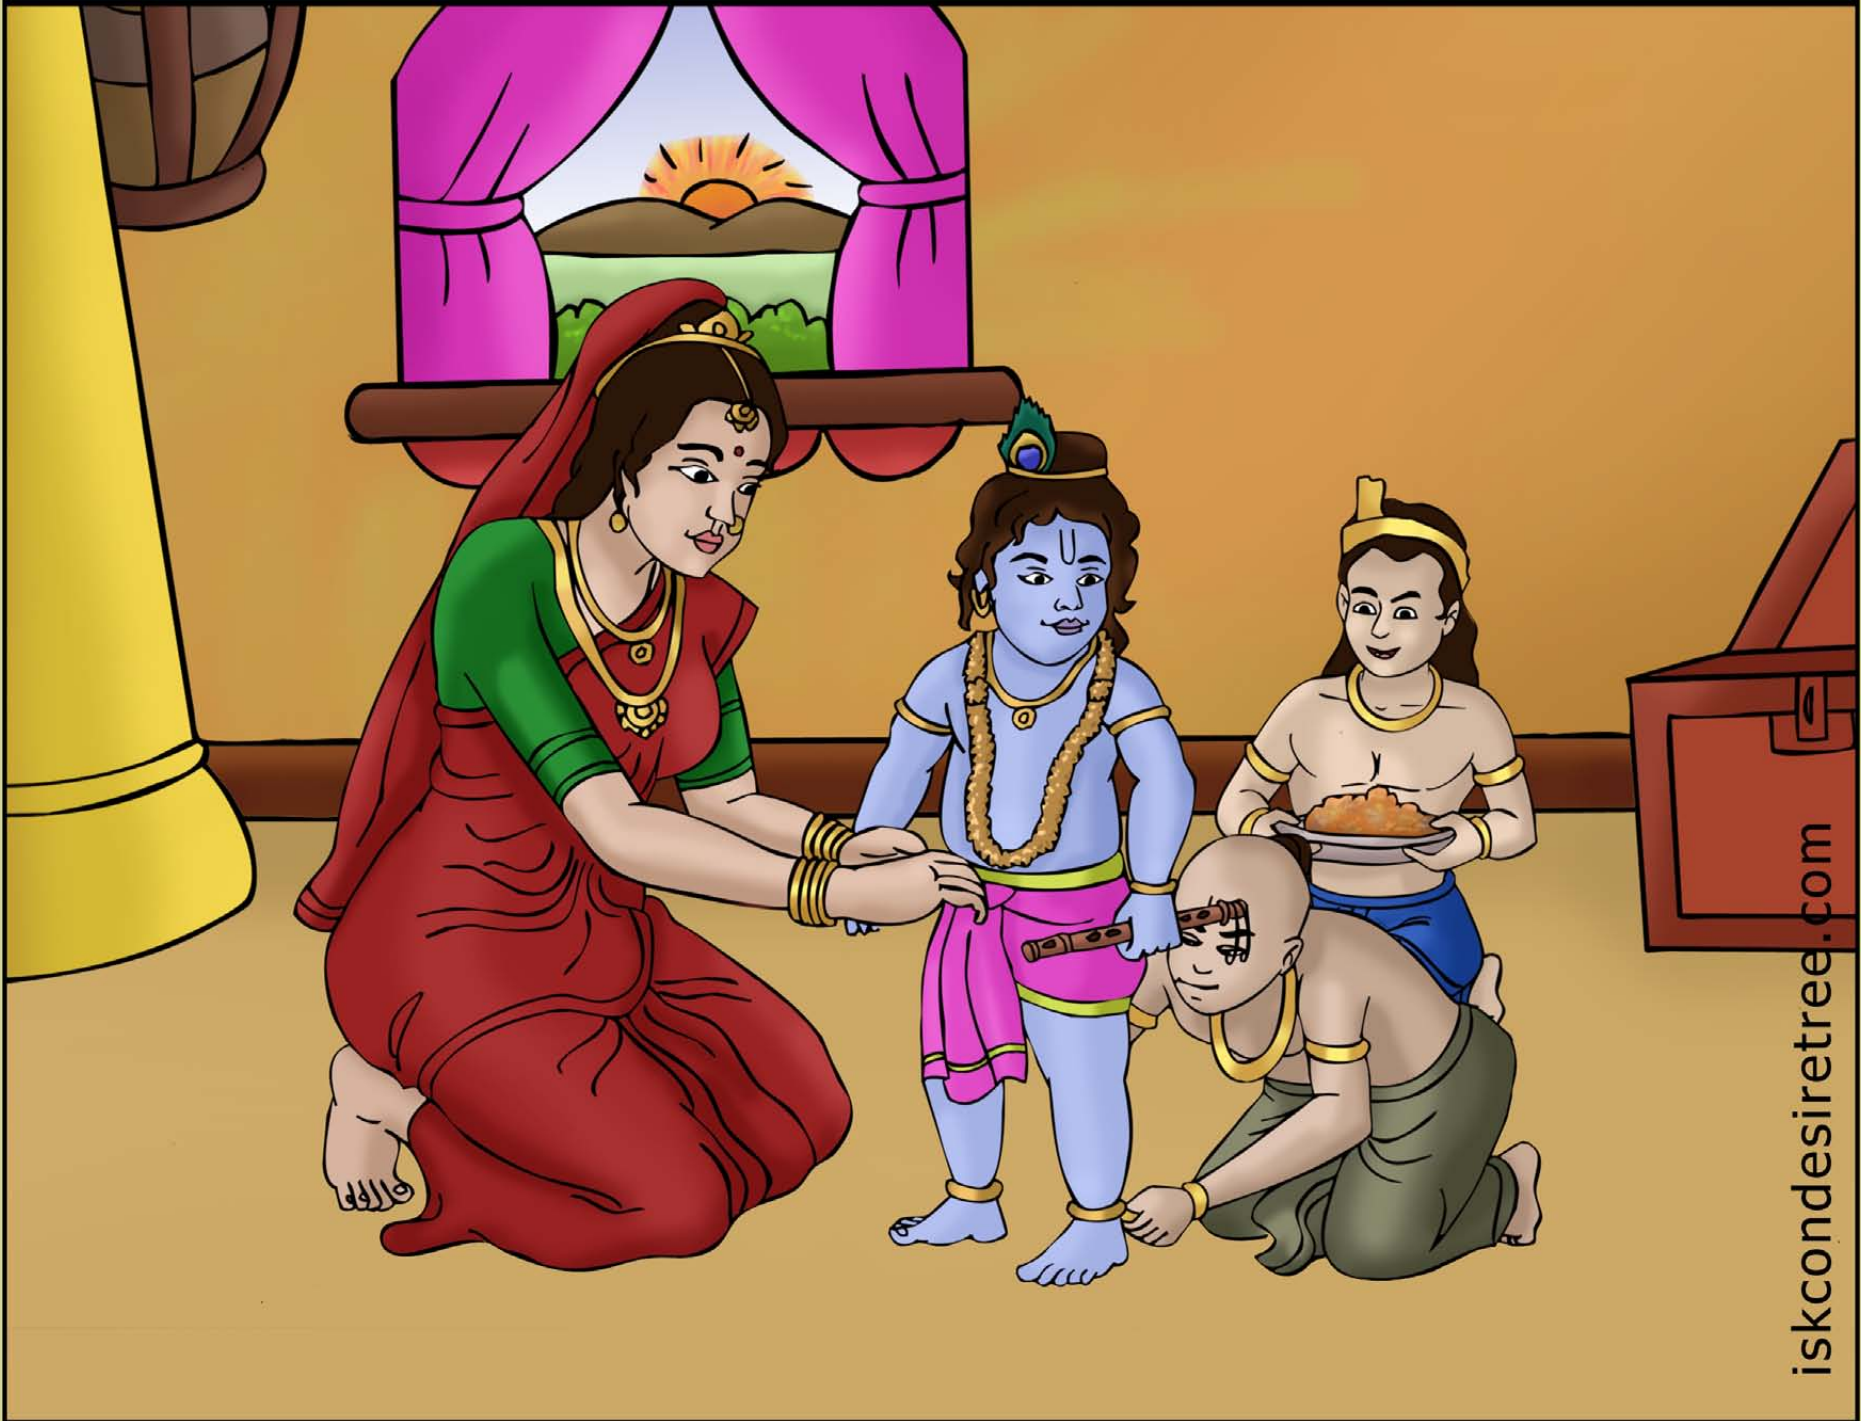

After waking up Krishna, mother Yashoda with great love and affection breastfeeds him.

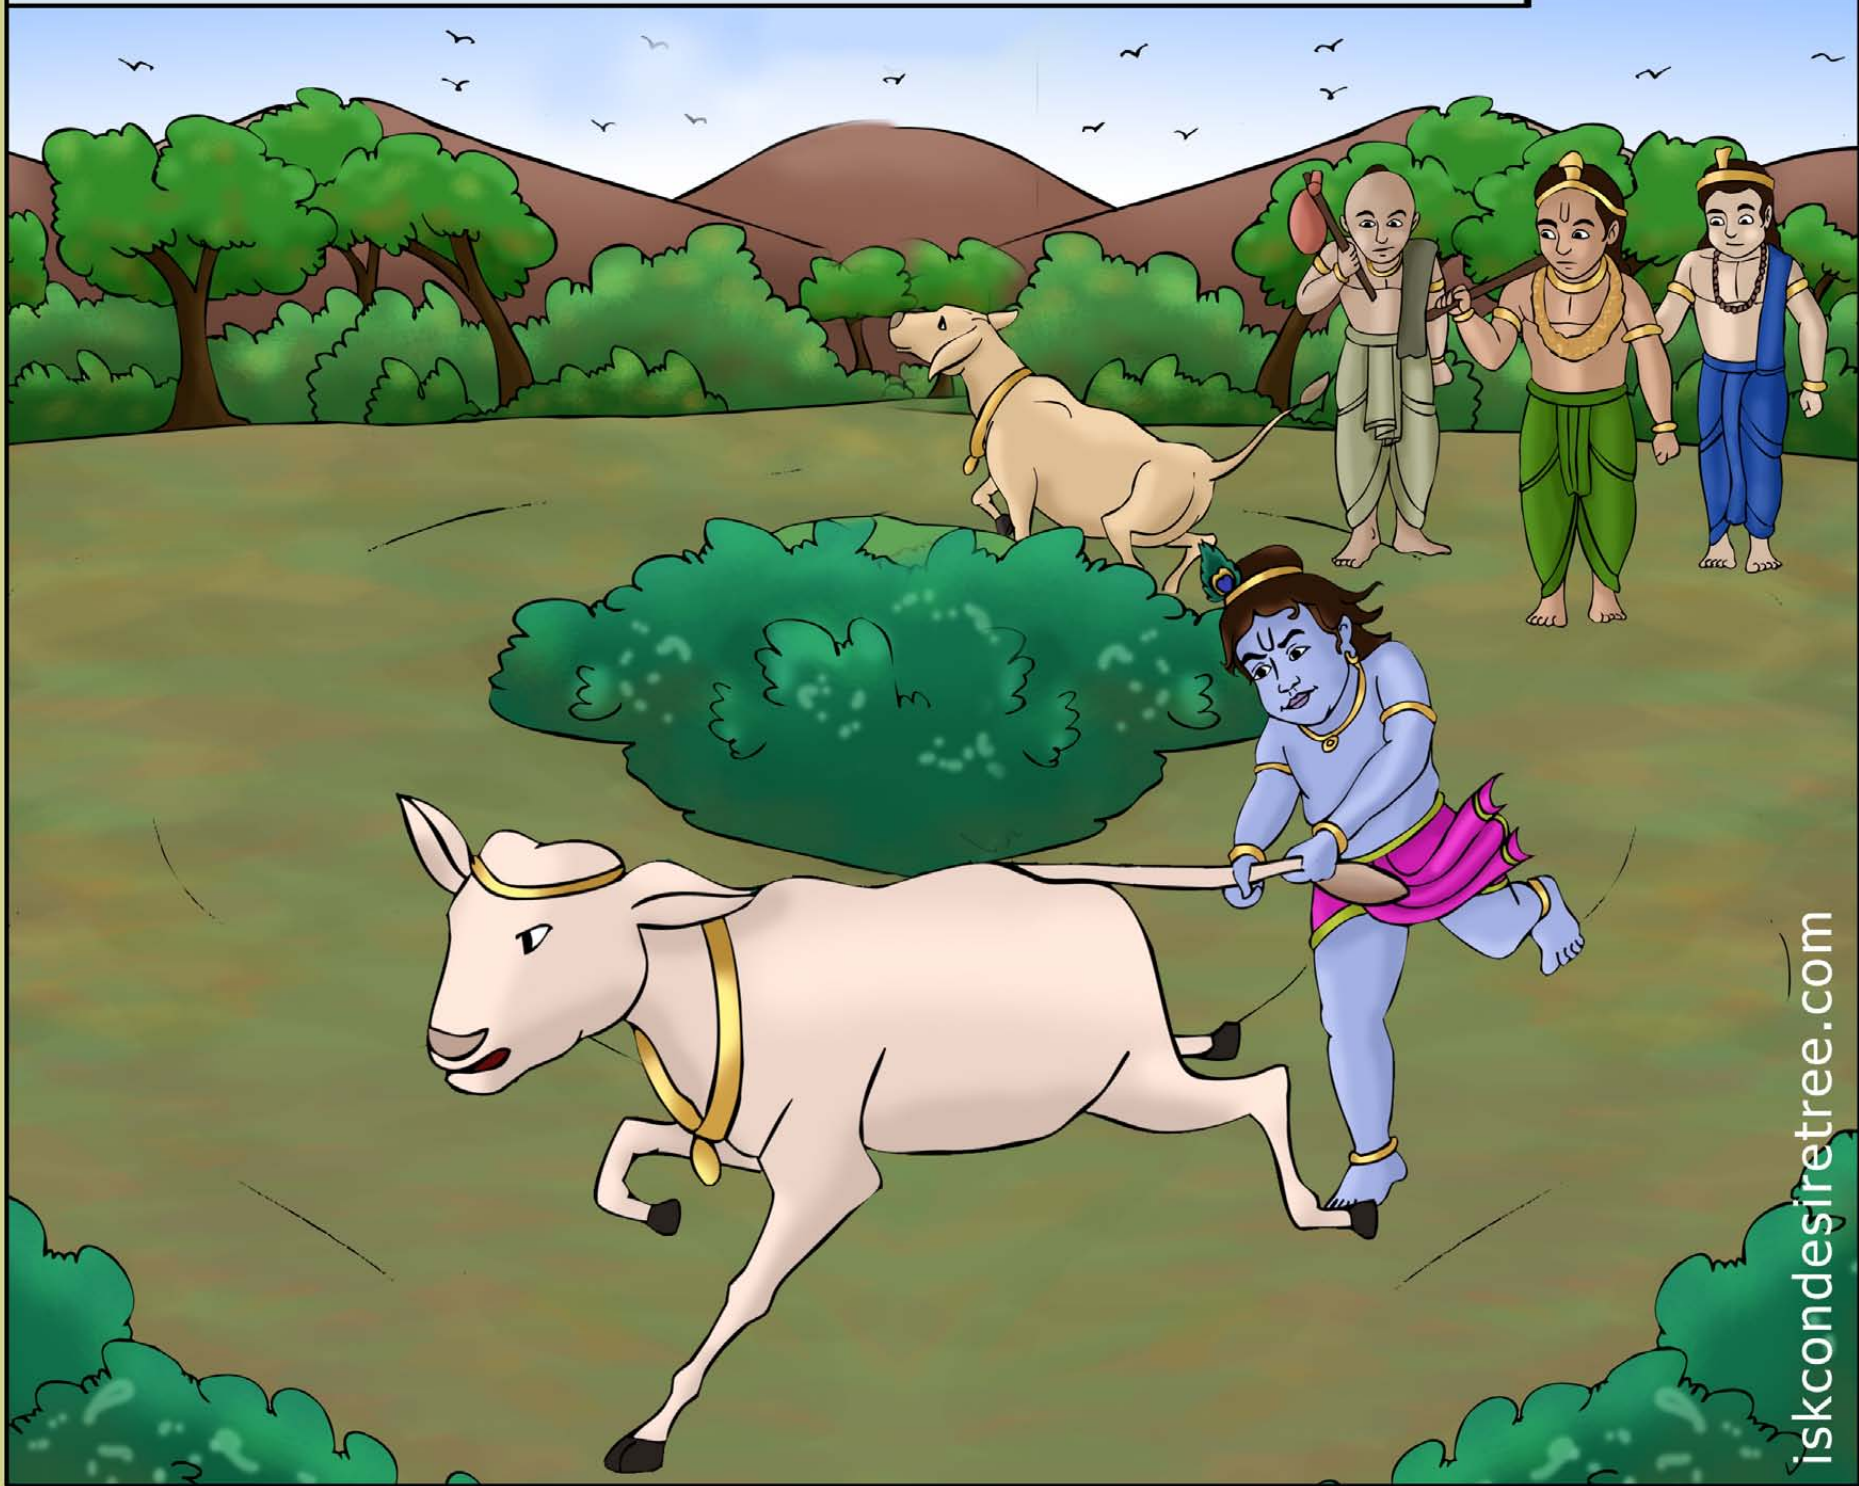

After bathing Krishna, mother Yashoda dresses her darling son with beautiful silken robes and ornaments. Krishna's friends also assist mother Yashoda in decorating him.

Krishna loves cows. He playfully holds their tail and runs behind them.

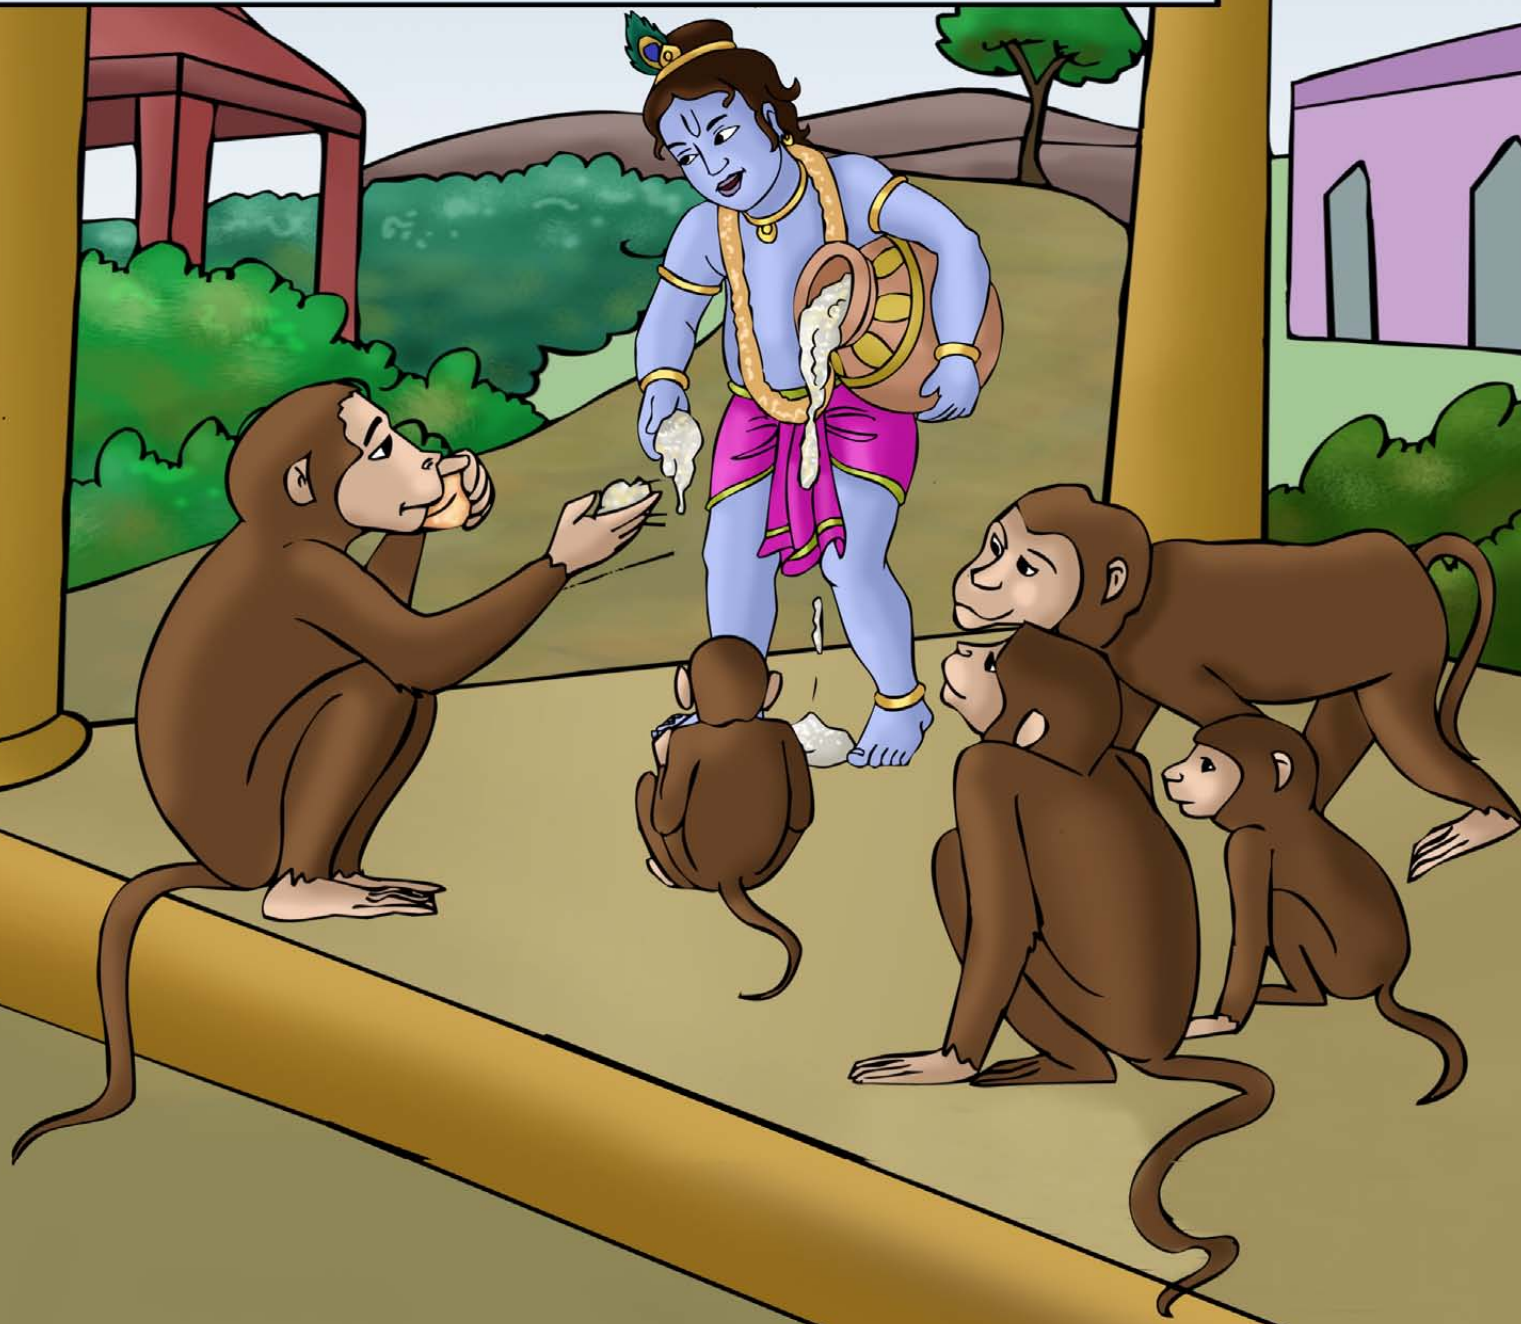

Krishna, Balarama and all cowherd boys steal butter from neighboring houses. The Gopis love to watch them steal butter and pretend to get angry.

Krishna happily distributes the stolen butter to the monkeys.

Krishna expertly unties the calves and sets them free to drink their mother's milk. When the cowherd men see this, they come running behind Krishna but he easily escapes.

When Krishna cannot find butter in the houses of the Gopis, he passes urine on the clean floor of the house.

Krishna teases the young maidens of Vrindavan, who carry butter pot on their head.

In other houses, if Krishna cannot spot the butter pot, he pinches the neighbors kid and runs away leaving the poor kid alone.

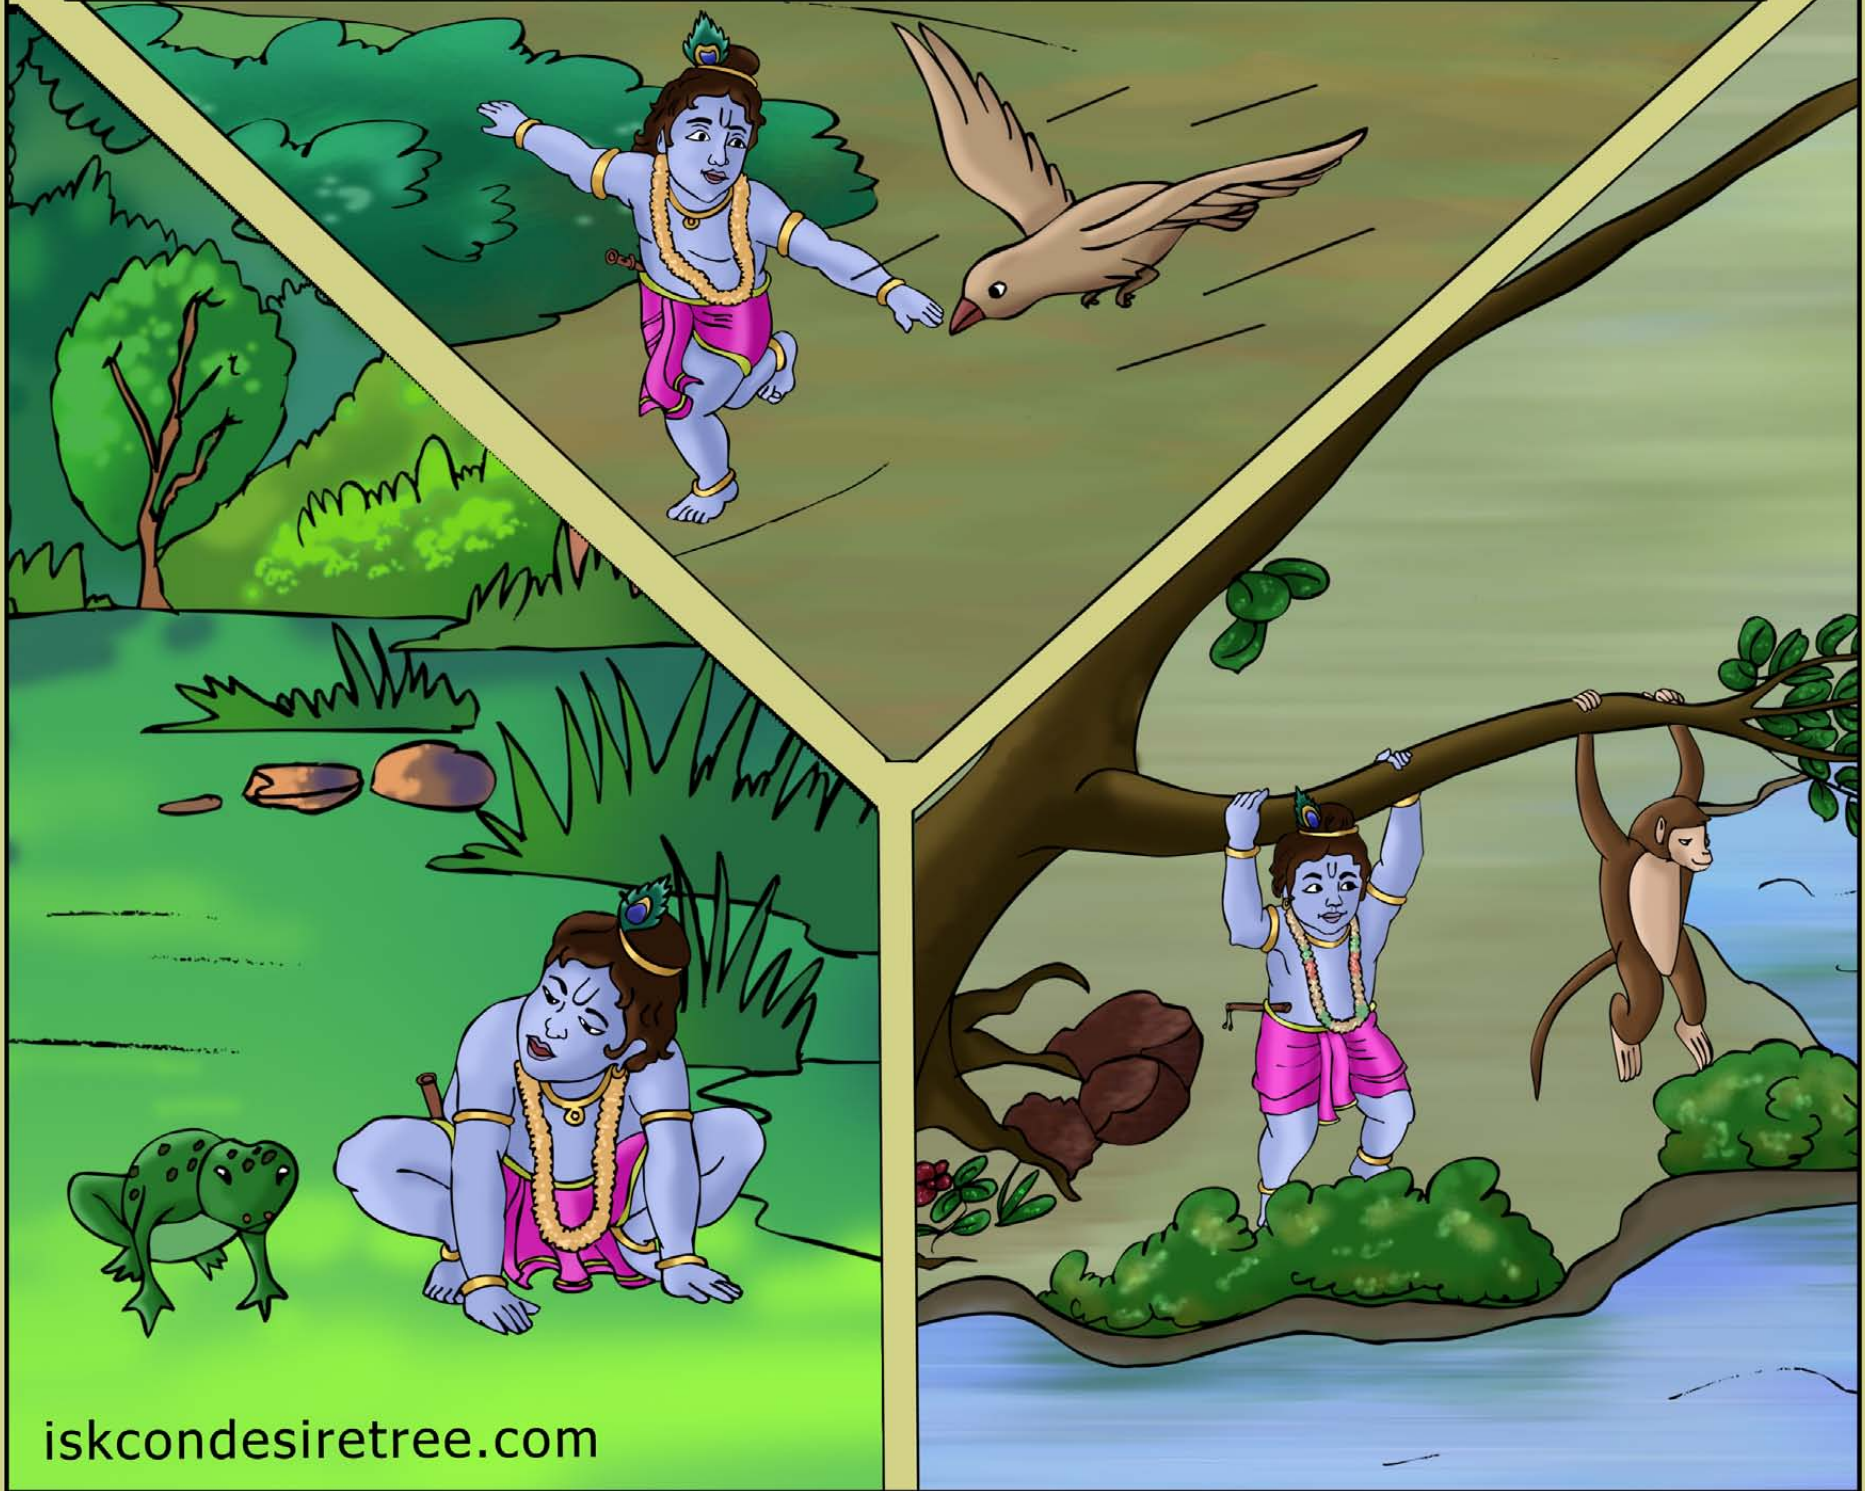

Flute is Krishna's constant companion. All the cows and cowherd friends of Krishna are attracted to the sweet melody Krishna's flute.

When Krishna goes to the forest to play, he imitates various birds and animals.

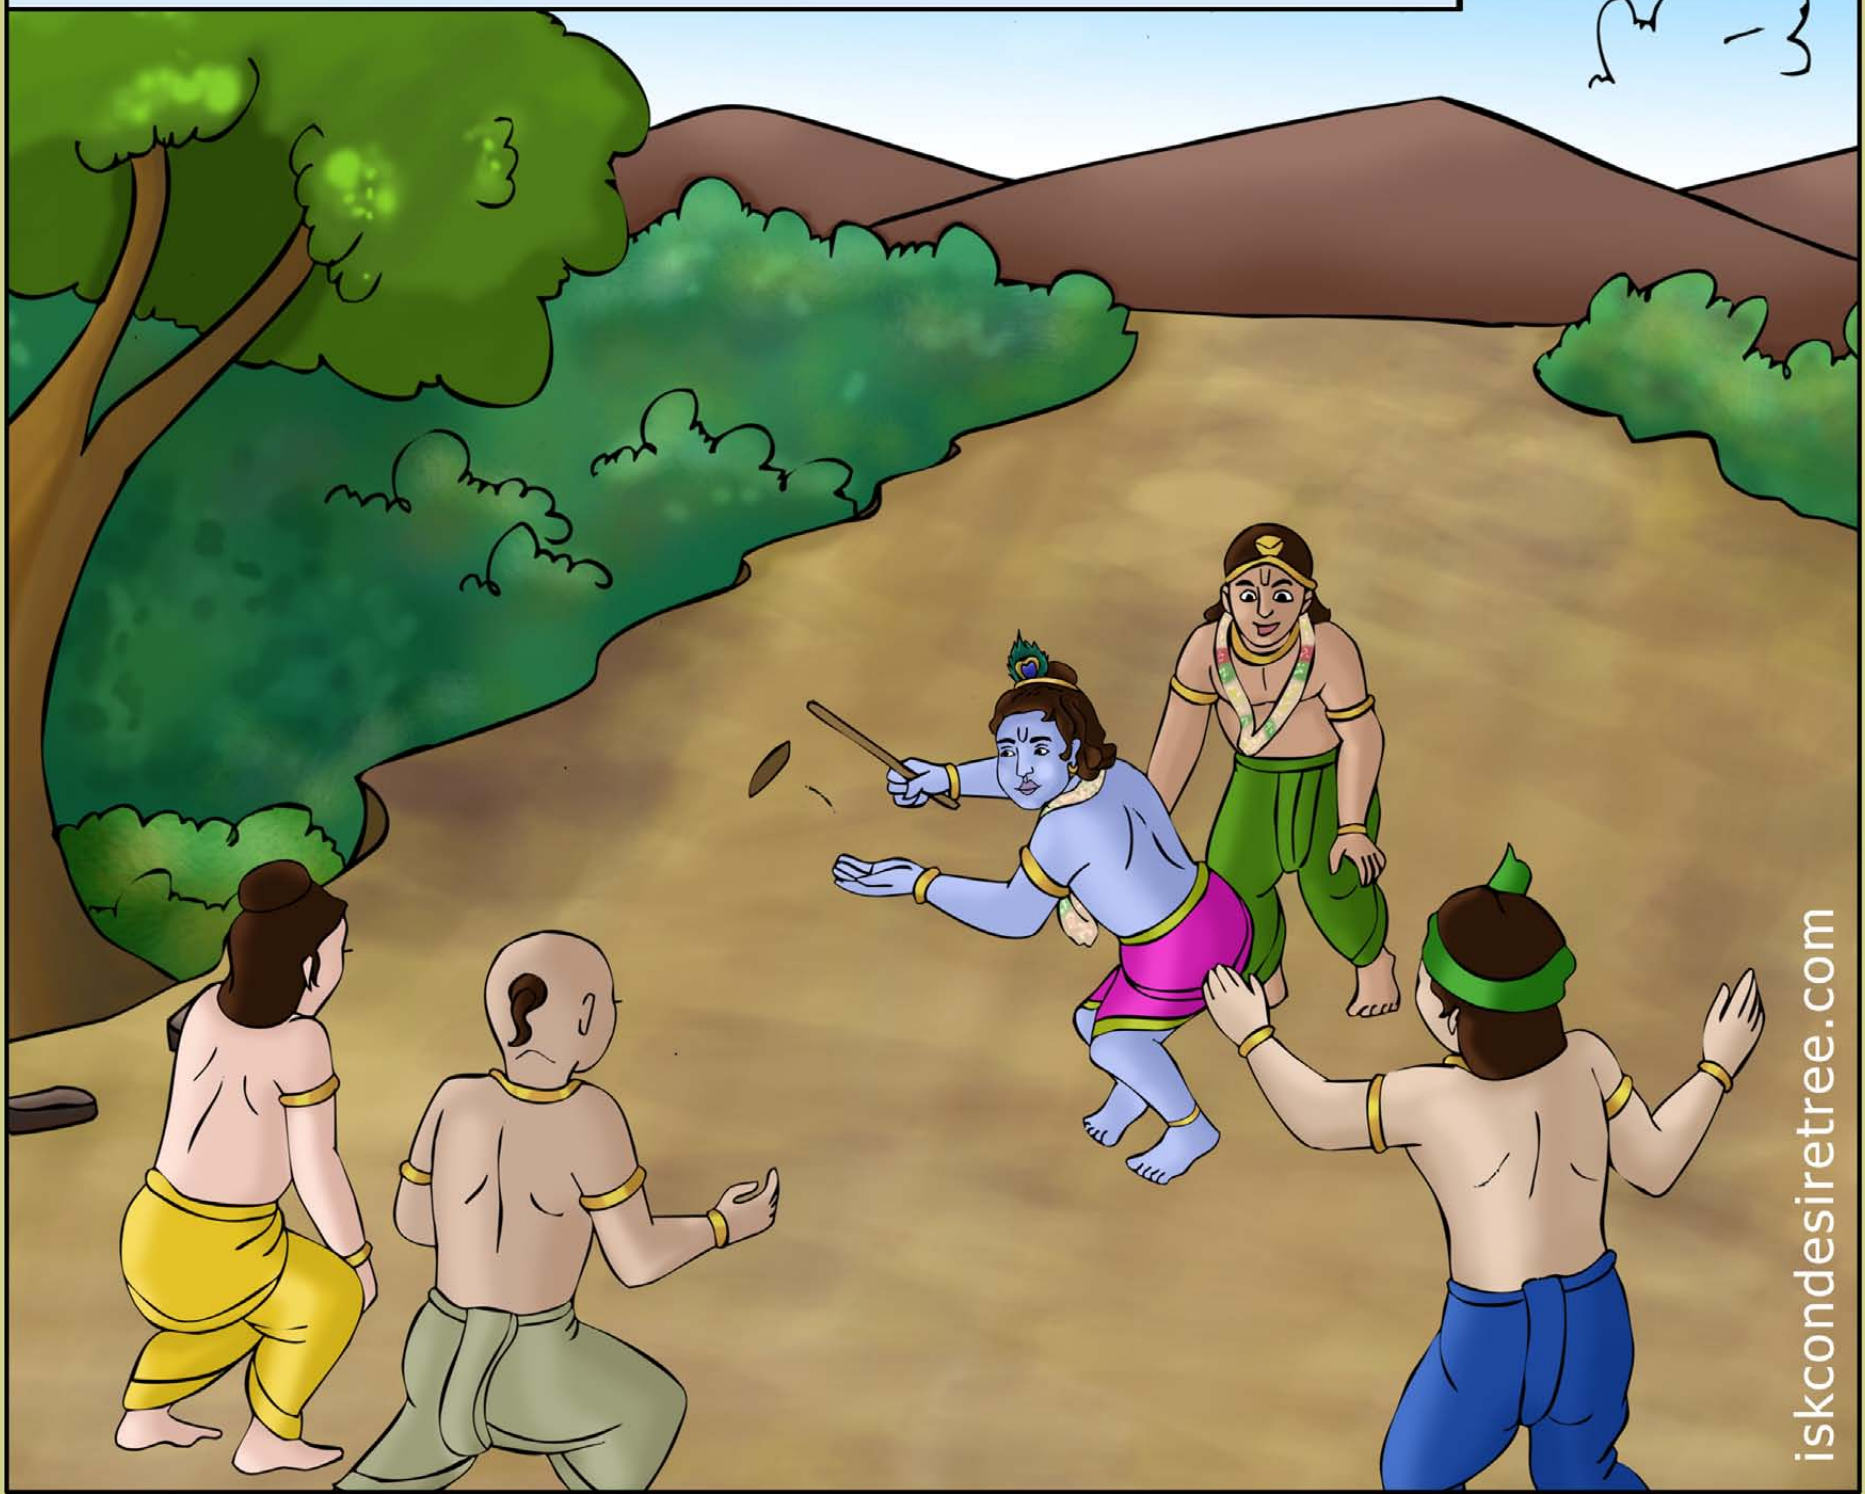

Krishna is so engrossed in playing with his friends that he forgets his lunch time. Mother Yashoda calls out to Krishna,

Krishna please come home. Its lunch time. We are all waiting for you.

Just like the village boys, Krishna plays Gulli danda with his friends.

In the evening, mother Yashoda, Nanda maharaj and mother Rohini eagerly wait for Krishna to return home from the forest.

Next day, early in the morning, Krishna again leaves for the forest. All cowherd boys share their lunch with each other.
